(a) Up to and including 1958 average rainfall for each year (represented by 100) is the average over the period 1911–1942. As from 1st January, 1959 a long period average from a selection of representative stations is used.

SEASONAL CONDITIONS, TASMANIA: APRIL, 1963

Rainfall: Almost the entire eastern half of Tasmania and the Northwest Coast received less than one inch of rain during April, 1963, and most of this area failed to reach 50 points.

The Midlands district and a tract extending northwestward to Devonport recorded less than 25 points while the area surrounding Cressy received less than 10 points which is less than five percent of normal. Many places recorded their driest April since 1945 while others experienced their driest month on record.

The usual ridge of high rainfall was evident over Western Tasmania and a small area near Lake Margaret exceeded eight inches. The only part of the State to receive falls in excess of normal was the extreme southwest.

Temperatures: The Northwest Coast, Northern and Eastern districts and the Southeast recorded mean maxima above 60° during the month. Small areas exceeding 65° occurred near Launceston and on the East Coast near St. Helens and Bicheno. The highest mean maximum was 67° at Bicheno.

Most inland and Western stations ranged from 55° to 60° although highland areas and the Central Plateau were lower than 55°.

Frosts: Frosts were reported on most days of the month from the Central Plateau and/or the Central North. Widespread heavy frosts occurred on the 14th of the month when most places in the South and East recorded their first frost of the year.

Seasonal Trends: Dry conditions again adversely affected agricultural activities and farmers in some districts of Southeastern Tasmania were still carting water for stock.

Frosts and low day temperatures in many areas retarded growth and widespread damage was reported from the record frost of the 14th April.

Feeding out commenced earlier than usual in all areas and good rains were needed during May to ensure a normal season.
